Your full name should be here, as it is. But it should be your last name in the header (I can't comment up there).

Instructor
Always needs to have a title reflecting the thesis. When I look at the title, I should know exactly what your essay will be about.

Instructor
Tie directly back to the thesis. I added this final sentence to show you.

Instructor
Again, tie it back to the thesis here to end off.

Instructor
Not needed. Only use the colon when you have a full sentence before the list.

Instructor
Conclude.

We all have heard or discussed the idea that online courses will one day take over real classes with teachers. At the moment, online classes for the first time are completely replacing real classes because of social distancing. Will online school become the new normal? From my observation, it will not. In this essay, I will demonstrate why online classes will remain as a second choice by looking at three disadvantages: lack of real interaction, dependency on the internet, and lack of physical activities.

First of all, it is obvious that online classes do not provide enough real interaction between students and teachers or between students. At school, students learn how to make friends, how to deal with different situations not just listen like being in an online class. In addition, group work, which is very important, is also extremely limited in online courses. Group work is necessary because it develops communication skill, and makes students more open and responsible. Also, for some subjects that require experiments like chemistry or physics, it's much harder to know what's going on due to lack of real interaction and experience. For example, no one will let a doctor who learned everything from videos with zero experience to operate a surgery and the same thing happens in other fields too. In general, in comparison to real classes, online classes do not provide enough real interaction. Therefore, they will never completely replace physical classes.
